Getting Started with Irish Genealogy Research

The first step in Irish genealogy research is to gather as much information as you can about your family. This includes names, dates of birth and death, places of residence, and any other information that you can find. Once you have gathered this information, you can start to search for records that will help you trace your family tree.

There are a number of different types of records that can be used for Irish genealogy research. These include:

- Birth, marriage, and death records
- Census records
- Land records
- Church records
- Military records

The type of records that you will need to search will depend on the time period and location that you are researching. For example, if you are researching your ancestors who lived in Ireland in the 19th century, you will need to search for census records and church records. If you are researching your ancestors who lived in Ireland in the 20th century, you will need to search for birth, marriage, and death records.

Finding Irish Genealogy Records

There are a number of different places where you can find Irish genealogy records. These include:

- The National Archives of Ireland
- The General Register Office
- The Irish Family History Centre
- Local libraries and archives
- Online databases

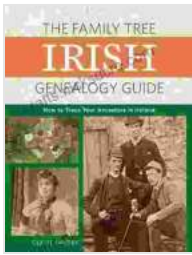

The National Archives of Ireland is the best place to start your search for Irish genealogy records. The National Archives holds a wide variety of records, including birth, marriage, and death records, census records, land records, and church records. The General Register Office is another important source of Irish genealogy records. The General Register Office holds birth, marriage, and death records for all of Ireland. The Irish Family History Centre is a great place to start your research if you are not sure where to begin. The Irish Family History Centre has a team of experts who can help you find the records that you need.
